How disasters change elections

By Andrew Reeves
November 5, 2012

Tags:
elections | hurricane sandy

Even though politicians don’t control the weather, voters punish them for the damage it causes. But analyzing all county-level election results for incumbent governors and presidents from 1970 to 2006 also shows that this punishment is dwarfed by the reward for taking action.

In my study with Professor John Gasper of Carnegie Mellon at Doha, published last year in the American Journal of Political Science, we examined countywide damage caused by natural disasters in the three months preceding elections. When a governor requested aid and a president approved it, presidents received a half-point increase in their county vote share while governors saw a four-point bump.

Hurricane Sandy was unprecedented because it was so destructive and occurred so close to Election Day, which makes its political impact difficult to predict. The impact on state and local elections may take time to discern, but it is clear that Sandy put the brakes on a Romney campaign that had been gaining momentum and thrust President Obama into a leadership role. Actions the president took and images he created will help determine how voter emotions about Sandy are expressed in the voting booth on Tuesday.

Why are politicians rewarded for natural disasters? Hurricanes, tornadoes, fires and other calamities are pop quizzes in leadership. While voters switch channels to avoid the millions of dollars’ worth of political ads late in a campaign, in a crisis they tune in for information from mayors, governors and presidents. They seek guidance, assurance that help is on the way and comforting empathy.

Sometimes, they find a proverbial knight in shining armor. When Hurricane Betsy struck New Orleans in 1965, the city’s mayor in a U.S. Army “duck boat” rescued at least one citizen stranded on her roof. But leaders sometimes fail the test, as in 1979 when Chicago Mayor Michael Bilandic so badly handled a snowstorm that he lost the Democratic primary to Jane Byrne’s insurgent campaign. And recall that President George W. Bush, in his final press conference, was still addressing questions about the federal response to Hurricane Katrina.

With Sandy, President Obama seems to have at least passed the test. He acted swiftly by issuing emergency declarations to several states before the storm made landfall. In the days after the storm he toured disaster areas, received briefings from officials and comforted voters. In storm-ravaged Brigantine, New Jersey, touring with Governor Chris Christie, the president was seen comforting tearful citizen Donna Vanzant – creating an emotional video of a man often accused of being cold and aloof personally connecting with a victim to assure her she’d get the help she needed.

So what will Obama’s reward be? Our study found a modest effect of a typical disaster declaration by a president. But most natural disasters are local in impact. Sandy is a national story, so citizens across the country see the powerful images, which could magnify support. Eventually, many of those affected will receive monetary assistance, but this will occur well after Tuesday. Based on history, the bounce for the incumbent will likely be less than two points.

The politics of Sandy display both the virtue and vice of democracy. Voters hold the president more accountable for his response than for a weather system beyond his control. At the same time, Governor Romney and President Obama have been mostly silent on climate change, a leading suspect in the cause of the calamitous weather of our 21st century. As other research has shown, forgoing short-term gain for long-term benefit is not a task at which we humans excel. Although this is exactly the task at hand, leaders are unlikely to do it unless an engaged electorate supports them.

PHOTO: U.S. President Barack Obama hugs North Point Marina owner Donna Vanzant as he tours damage done.
How disasters change elections

by Hurricane Sandy in Brigantine, New Jersey, October 31, 2012. REUTERS/Larry Downing

« Previous Post
It’s the (lack of) unity, stupid!
Next Post »
Can Obama fire up younger voters?

More From Reuters

- West Virginia engineer proves to be a David to VW’s Goliath  |  23 Sep
- Factbox: Diesel engines and how VW’s ‘defeat device’ worked  |  21 Sep
- Meet the angriest man running for president – no it’s not Trump  |  15 Sep
- Might as well butter him, Trump is toast  |  18 Sep
- U.S. Air Force cites ‘alarming’ Russian strides in air power  |  14 Sep

Sponsored Financial Content

- 4 Of The Best Credit Cards For Consolidating Debt  NerdWallet
- Learn from industry experts as they discuss midyear investing ideas.  Fidelity InsideOut
- The 7 Most Amazing Credit Cards If You Have Excellent Credit  Next Advisor
- CDs and short duration bonds: Get more yield on your cash.  Fidelity Investments
- Don’t Let Wall Street Rip You Off, Put Your Savings in a CD  Banks.org

From The Web

Looking for a Business Loan?  BusinessLoans.com
3 Banks Introduce New Cards Paying Unusually High Miles P...  LendingTree
Why You Should Rejoice About the Netflix of Wine  Popdust by Tasting Room
New Grammar App Can Help You Succeed at Work  Grammarly
Brilliant Mortgage Payoff Method Has Banks On Edge  Comparisons.org
4 in 5 Americans Are Ignoring Buffett’s Warning  The Motley Fool

Russia faces $12 billion asset freeze

China’s iFake 6S out before the real deal

Sponsored Links by Taboola

JUST FOUND AT KAYAK.COM
AMERICAS BEST VALUE INN ... $21
LA QUINTA INN & SUITES ST.... $89
DAYS INN ST. LOUIS NORTH $72

RECOMMENDED VIDEO

China’s iFake 6S out before the real deal
No comments so far

Wildblue internet
Thanks to my roommate who told me regarding this web site, this weblog is genuinely remarkable.

Posted by Exede Crescent | Report as abusive

Why disasters change elections

Why VW scandal could spell death of diesel

Carson calls for end to "PC culture"

Sponsored Financial Content

A case for stocks now; why they could still climb despite high prices. Fidelity Investments
Hear expert insights on what's ahead on the financial horizon. Fidelity InsideOut
7 Outrageous Credit Cards For Those Of Us That Have Excellent Credit Next Advisor
The 7 Most Amazing Credit Cards If You Have Excellent Credit Next Advisor
Ridiculous Credit Cards Offering 0% Interest Until 2017 Next Advisor

MORE REUTERS NEWS

Friday, 25 September 2015, 1:14 am
FED'S YELLEN RESUMES SCHEDULE AFTER STRUGGLING TO FINISH SPEECH

Friday, 25 September 2015, 1:10 am
NSA CHIEF SAYS CLINTON EMAILS WERE 'OPPORTUNITY' FOR FOREIGN POWERS

Friday, 25 September 2015, 1:04 am
ADDRESSING CONGRESS, POPE URGES U.S. TO END HOSTILITY TOWARD IMMIGRANTS

Friday, 25 September 2015, 12:46 am
VOLKSWAGEN TURNS TO PORSCHE BOSS TO STEER IT OUT OF CRISIS: SOURCE

Friday, 25 September 2015, 12:28 am
ASIAN SHARES RISE, DOLLAR GAINS AS YELLEN REVIVES RATE TALK

How disasters change elections