The Particularistic President

Executive Branch Politics and Political Inequality

As the holders of the only office elected by the entire nation, presidents have long claimed to be sole stewards of the interests of all Americans. Scholars have largely agreed, positing the president as an important counterbalance to the parochial impulses of members of Congress. This supposed fact is often invoked in arguments for concentrating greater power in the executive branch. Douglas L. Kriner and Andrew Reeves challenge this notion and, through an examination of a diverse range of policies from disaster declarations, to base closings, to the allocation of federal spending, show that presidents, like members of Congress, are particularistic. Presidents routinely pursue policies that allocate federal resources in a way that disproportionately benefits their more narrow partisan and electoral constituencies. Though presidents publicly don the mantle of a national representative, in reality they are particularistic politicians who prioritize the needs of certain constituents over others.

Douglas L. Kriner is an associate professor of political science at Boston University. He is the author of After the Rubicon: Congress, Presidents, and the Politics of Waging War, which received the 2013 D.B. Hardeman Prize from the LBJ Foundation for the best book that focuses on the U.S. Congress from the fields of biography, history, journalism, and political science. He is coauthor (with Francis Shen) of The Casualty Gap: The Causes and Consequences of American Wartime Inequalities. His work has also appeared in the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of Political Science, and the Journal of Politics, among other outlets.

Andrew Reeves is an assistant professor of political science at Washington University in St. Louis and a research Fellow at the Weidenbaum Center on the Economy, Government, and Public Policy. He previously held a faculty position at Boston University and has held research fellowships at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University and at the Center for the Study of American Politics within the Institution for Social and Policy Studies at Yale University. His work has appeared in the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of Political Science, and the Journal of Politics, among other outlets.

Acknowledgments

In writing this book, we have benefited from the thoughtful insights of many individuals who have read drafts or listened to our questions and shared their thoughts. These individuals include: Barry Burden, Ian Clark, Adam Dynes, Katherine Levine Einstein, Justin Fox, Jim Gimpel, David Glick, Daniel Hopkins, William Howell, Jeff Jenkins, Gary King, Toby Merrill, Gary Miller, Terry Moe, Ryan Moore, Max Palmer, Eleanor Powell, Jon Rogowski, and Christine Rossell.

The book was also improved by the comments and criticisms that we received at various workshops and conferences where participants and discussants challenged us to think harder about our research questions. These venues include: the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Georgetown University, Stanford University, the Harris School at the University of Chicago, the University of Virginia, and Yale University.

In particular, we wish to single out individuals who attended a book conference at Boston University, which was generously funded by Graham Wilson and the College of Arts and Sciences. Here, we had the great benefit of receiving advice from Dino Christenson, Jeff Cohen, Dean Lacy, and Frances Lee, each of whom who read the entire manuscript, offered valuable suggestions and insight, and sacrificed a Saturday to share their thoughts. We also thank chairs, discussants, and participants at meetings of the Midwest Political Science Association and American Political Science Association where elements of this project were presented and improved.

At Cambridge University Press, we thank our outstanding editor Robert Dreesen, who encouraged us and guided us throughout the project, and Elizabeth Janetschek and Brianda Reyes, who deftly steered...
